Coatings are increasingly used to give a diamond simulant such as cubic zirconia a more "diamond-like" appearance. One such substance is diamond-like carbon—an amorphous carbonaceous material that has some physical properties similar to those of the diamond. Advertising suggests that such a coating would transfer some of these diamond-like properties to the coated stone, hence enhancing the diamond simulant.

The rough diamond is then cut by sawing or cleaving (splitting) along the grain of the stone. The pieces are then mounted in a fast-turning lathe where the gem is shaped roughly by a diamond-tipped tool, followed by the bruiting process, which rounds out the stones. Finally the diamonds are polished, allowing all of their facets to emerge.

A Lesson From Diamonds: Every Person is a Diamond

Unlike the other stones on this list, cubic zirconia is a diamond simulant, meaning it is created to resemble diamonds and is not a natural gemstone. Cubic zirconia, commonly known as CZ, is zirconium oxide in cubic form. Clear CZ stones look like flawless diamonds and are the most popular diamond alternatives for fashion jewelry.
